

“Bartender is the rarest Species on earth and the only religion, he follows is Bartending”

By Rakmo Boozewalla

There are more than 100 mixed beverages known, till date. They are classified, taking into consideration - structure, capacity, serving-temperature and moment of consumption. The latter is the most frequently used.

Pre-dinner Cocktails: served as aperitifs, from the Latin word aperire (to open). Most of these are distinguished on the basis of how much saliva is generated, which also stokes the appetite.

After-dinner: Served after dinner, they must not be confused with digestives. These work as a finale, to the meal, characterized by significant presence of liquors and creme, and complex olfactory and gustatory incidence.

Anytime cocktails: served at any moment, they are characterized by alcoholic base- with addition of soft drinks, and use of sweeteners.

Types: Short (if served in cocktail glasses)

Medium (If served in shot tumblers or an old-fashioned)

Long drinks (If served in high tumblers or other high-capacity glasses) featuring the presence of fruit juices or sodas.

Since the first liquor was distilled from the fruits from various plants, men have always tried to mix them to highlight the taste, and at the same time reviving the colors to make the various beverages more and more attractive. Yet, it was during the Middle Ages and in the renaissance, that mixtures made of liquor and wine were begun to consider art.
